

Dear Friends,

In China, orphans are no longer eligible to be adopted at age fourteen. Orphanages must then release them as 'adults'. The majority of these children - particularly those with disabilities and special needs - become homeless, trafficked or institutionalized.

God has been preparing me to work in China for a long while. In high school, I decided that I had no interest in being a missionary abroad. I particularly did not want to go to densely populated areas. Over time, however, my interest in tea allowed me to see beauty in China, as well as its people and history. A year ago, I asked God to send me. He answered China and has been encouraging, preparing, and providing for me to go.

He has now provided a place for me to serve in Langfang, China. I will move to China in August to provide vocational training in coffee and tea preparation to orphans with special needs through GoodWorks Orphan Care. Our first vocational training center - a coffeehouse and roastery - opens this December in Langfang. Soon thereafter, we are launching a model coffee farm in the Southwest to teach minority farmers and help their families. We hope to launch a number of other training centers and cafés in the coming years in partnership with humanitarian organizations, missions groups, and local orphanages.

I am obligated as a Christian to pursue justice. The orphans that I will be training and working with need an advocate, a redeemer, and a savior. Beyond my role in their lives, I must preach the gospel of Christ and live the consequence of its truth. For the sake of Christ, I pursue justice for those who have none; I aim to live selfless in the reality of Jesus' sacrifice for me. While serving in China, I will do my best to respect and work within the confines of the law. However, my first authority is the Word, my first judge the Spirit, and my first obligation the Gospel of Christ.

In preparation for moving to China, I am studying coffee growing, processing, and roasting in addition to working on my skills as a barista and studying Chinese. However, there is much that must happen beyond what I can do. As a not-for-profit, GoodWorks is unable to pay me beyond providing insurance, housing, and covering transportation. For the rest, I need your support.

I hope to raise six thousand dollars to cover the cost of moving to China, plus around five hundred dollars per month for the first year. Though financial support is necessary, none of this can happen without your prayers. I welcome your thoughts, guidance, and support. I ask that you pray for me, for this venture, and prayerfully consider whether to support me financially. Please contact me with any questions. In hope,
